Life in each of the world's biomes is very different. As a result, animals, plants, and other living things have adapted to live in each place. The adaptation may be a body part, covering, or behavior that helps an animal survive.

Many animals have body parts that help them live in their environment. Macaws use their large beaks to crack open large nuts and grab the fruit inside.

Every year, thousands of people from all over the world visit the Yucatán Peninsula in Mexico. A peninsula is a piece of land with water around it on almost all sides. The Yucatán Peninsula sticks out into the Gulf of Mexico, at the southern tip of the North American continent. The Yucatán Peninsula has beaches with white sand and bright blue water. Underwater divers can see the coral reefs.

There are tropical rainforests thick with green plants, trees, and animals on the Yucatán Peninsula. Tucked away among the trees there is a once-magnificent Maya city called Chichén Itzá. This old city is waiting to be explored!

Grid Coordinates

A map can show us the locations (lo-KAY-shuhns) of things and places. A grid of lines is put over a map. The grid lines form cells. Each cell has a letter and number. These are called grid coordinates. In the map below, cell A1 is shaded blue.

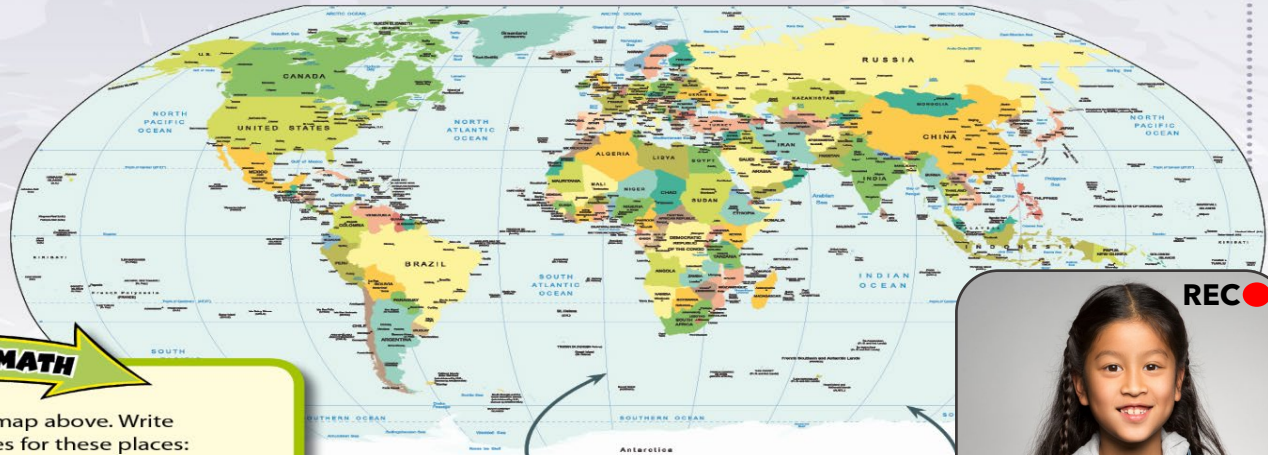

LET'S EXPLORE MATH

Look at the street map above. Write the grid coordinates for these places:

- a. mall
- b. library
- c. playground
- d. parking lot
- e. hospital
- f. school

Longitude and Latitude

Some maps of Earth have vertical and horizontal grid lines. The vertical lines are known as longitude (LAHN-juh-tood). The horizontal lines are known as latitude (LAT-uh-tood). The coordinates of these grid lines give the locations of different parts of the world.
